

Wong Fleming provides local, national and international business clients with advice and representation in a full range of government contract matters including:

- Contract Formation
- Contract Administration
- Subcontracting
- Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization

With respect to Contract Formation and Administration, we advise companies on all aspects of competing for government contracts. We provide advice regarding standards of conduct, teaming agreements, competition and sole-source requirements, negotiations, sealed bidding, mistakes, small and small disadvantaged business preferences and contract requirements arising under federal statutes and regulations. We work with companies in their overall marketing efforts to ensure that applicable procurement regulations and legal principles are utilized to achieve maximum competitive advantage.

Regarding subcontracting, we counsel clients on all aspects of selling to prime contractors. We draft and negotiate teaming agreements, and we review subcontracts to determine the applicability of government contract clauses “flowed down” from the prime contract. We also counsel clients in all aspects of the administration and performance of subcontracts and represent prime contractors and subcontractors in disputes involving: changes, differing site conditions, schedule slippages and delay claims. We advise clients regarding the “indirect appeal” process and the problems associated with default and convenience terminations of subcontractors.

Wong Fleming has an extensive practice engaged in addressing the special needs of small businesses and small disadvantaged businesses (“SDB”) – from regulatory aspects of government procurement programs to the special corporate legal issues that confront these entities. The firm’s experience includes securing certification under the Small Business Administration (“SBA”) Section 8(a) Program and representing clients in securing set-aside contract awards (both sole source and competitive). Wong Fleming professionals also provide legislative and regulatory advice and assistance in securing legislation, regulations and individual determinations favorable to our clients’ business interests.
